

Rules have not yet been established for calculating CO2 emissions and reductions associated with changes in land use. At this stage, international efforts are focused on reaching agreement on forest-related activities (reforestation, afforestation, and deforestation). Once agreement has been reached on these activities, further attention will likely be devoted to developing agreement on how to calculate emissions and reductions associated with other forms of vegetation and soils. Additional information will be provided to MAC members as it